Introduction:

Teachers' unions have been described as the preeminent power in American education, and there is growing sentiment among academics and the public that their power is not being used for good. For example, in the 2011 Phi Delta Kappa/Gallup Poll, 47% of respondents believed that unionization has hurt the quality of American education. Compared to just 26% who held that, has the academic achievement gap between students from high income and low income families changed in the last few decades and if so why? Historically, low-income students as a group have performed less well than high-income students on most measures of academic success, including standardized test scores, grades, high school completion rates, and college enrollment and completion rates.
